Good English campaign goes on social networking sites

THIS year's Speak Good English Movement aims to reach out to young people by engaging them on social networking sites like Facebook, Twitter and blogs.

The movement also has a new tagline – “Impress. Inspire. Intoxicate.” – with the key message that good communication skills transcend the use of correct grammar and vocabulary.

Campaign activities include an online drama series and free English workshops conducted by the British Council at Woodlands Regional Library in October.

More information about the movement can be found at www.goodenglish.org.sg.
